FOUR THOUSAND POLICE SEEK SLAYER OF CHILD

NOTE THREATENS TWIN SISTER OF MUTILATED GIRL; SUSPECT HELD

Alleged Degenerate Being Quizzed While Search Continues—Reward Totals More Than $50,000—Woman Latest Suspect

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 19.—Four thousand police officers of southern California today continued their search for the kidnaper and slayer of 12-year-old Marjorie Parker, whose mutilated torso Saturday night was returned to her father, Perry M. Parker, bank official, upon payment of $1,500 ransom.

Excitement, already at white heat, was intensified by the finding of a note threatening the life of Marjorie Parker, the slain girl's twin-sister. This note, police reported early today, had been placed by a man in a fire alarm box in Hollywood, and the alarm turned in. A heavy guard was immediately thrown around the Parker home.

All police officers in Los Angeles have been placed on sixteen-hour duty in the search for the slayer of the little girl.

Citizens have offered a total of more than $50,000 reward money for the arrest and conviction of the slayer. At periods during yesterday and last night appeals broadcast by radio brought in an average of $50 a minute. Today is expected to see the rewards reach a sum unprecedented in the history of this region.

A suspect, one of scores questioned, is still being detained here. He is held on suspicion of grand theft. Police withheld his name, but he was said to be the 25-year-old son of a local physician. It was said he had been suspected of crimes against children in the past.

Release of a suspect held at Las Vegas, Nev., was directed in a telegram sent by local police late last night. This man, proceeding by stage from Los Angeles to St. Louis, was detained at Las Vegas because of information he had paid his fare in $20 bills, the entire amount of the $1500 ransom money being in bills of that denomination.

A suitcase was found a block from the place where, Saturday night, the child's father paid over $1500 to recover his daughter who, he believed, still was alive and uninjured. In the suitcase were found towels stained with blood, newspapers bearing similar stains, wire thread like that which had been wound around the child's neck, and a pad of paper similar to that which had been used for the notes sent by the kidnaper to Parker.

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 19.—Arrested near the spot where the mutilated body of Marjorie Parker was flung at her father by the girl's fiendish kidnaper, a woman was being grilled by police today in the belief that she may have been an accomplice in one of the most atrocious crimes in the history of a civilized city.

A few hours after Perry M. Parker stooped to the road to take to his arms what he then believed was his living daughter, a stocking footed woman screaming ran out of the house, two doors away. "I didn't kill her; I didn't kill her," the hysterical woman shouted.

Believing the woman to be drunk officers led her off to jail. Becoming suspicious of the house from which the woman fled, detectives entered to find five bloody heel marks on the floor. They were unmistakably a man's footmarks.

FLINT, Mich., Dec. 19.—Two gunmen who attempted to assassinate J. R. Taylor, crime-fighting editor and general manager of the Flint Daily Journal, in his home last night, were sought today.

The men escaped after firing one ineffective shot at Taylor when he opened his front door in response to a ring of the door bell. Flint was greatly disturbed at the attempted crime, which is similar to that in Canton, O., where Don Mellett, newspaper editor, was killed. Mellett was shot because he waged a relentless war against crime.

Taylor also has bitterly fought crime since he went to Flint seven years ago. He said after the shooting he believed gunmen paid by his enemies acquired as a result of his newspaper policy had fired the shot at him.

Three small girls who saw the assassins escape were sought by police today in the hope a more accurate description might be obtained of the men.

The present record of fifty-two hours, twenty-two minutes and some seconds is held by two German aviators.

SCRIPTURE OFFERS TEXT FOR CLOSING ARGUMENT OF REMUS

Defendant Abandon Dock To Assume Role Of Lawyer

CINCINNATI, O., Dec. 19.—Drama the like of which even the stage has seldom seen will be enacted in criminal court today when George Remus stands before a jury and pleads his own case.

It will be the closing argument of the amazing man who, as an attorney, is defending himself for shooting his wife to death in Eden Park on October 6 last, when she was on her way to court to divorce him.

Pacing the floor before the jury of men and women will be Remus the lawyer. In his empty chair in the prisoner's dock will be the visionary figure of Remus, the defendant.

At his elbow, garbed in black will be Romola Remus, 24-year-old daughter of the defendant by his first wife who divorced him when he fell in love with Imogene Holmes prior to embarking upon his astounding bootleg adventures.

Remus hopes to make this closing address the masterpiece of his career before the bar, said Remus, talking as usual in the third person. "In one year in Chicago Remus defended eighteen persons on the charge of murder and obtained eighteen consecutive acquittals."

"And now Remus, fighting the most vital case of all to him, hopes to do as well for himself. Remus, however, is not too optimistic. It always has been his policy to take the pessimistic view, and that is the view he is taking now."

Remus said he would take as his text as a biblical quotation, from Deuteronomy, which follows: "If a man be found lying with a woman married to an husband, then they shall both of them die, both the man that lay with the woman and the woman; so shall thou put away evil from Israel."

"Air Bad" Survivors Tell Divers By Tapping Morse Code—Second Tapping May Indicate Others Of 40 Victims Are Living

(BULLETIN)
PROVINCETOWN, Mass., Dec. 19.—Rescue operations for the crew of the sunken United States submarine S-4, which were stopped by a forty-five mile gale, will be resumed between 4 and 5 o'clock this afternoon.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—Chill, biting winds, coming out of the northwest and whipping the upper Atlantic to heavy waves, is seriously retarding the heroic attempts that are being made to rescue the six men known to be still alive in the tomb-like hull of the submarine S-4.

This official report to the navy department this morning from Rear Admiral Frank H. Brumby, aboard the U. S. S. Falcon, off Provincetown, Mass., diminished hopes here that it will be possible to save the men.

"Sea entirely too rough for diving and is getting worse," was Admiral Brumby's pessimistic message to the department.

PROVINCETOWN, Mass., Dec. 19.—Hope of saving the known six who are gasping their lives away in the cramped torpedo room on the sunken submarine S-4, a hundred feet below the surface of the pitching Atlantic, dwindled today when the hundreds of rescue workers, divers, engineers and scores of salvaging ships were laid idle by high seas and extreme cold.

Arrival of the huge air filled pontoons which were to be used in bringing the disabled craft to the surface had buoyed up spirits of the rescuers early in the day, but the workers were forced to surrender, as the day wore on to the mountainous winter seas.

PROVINCETOWN, Mass., Dec. 19.—Many are dead but six men—perhaps others—are alive today in the hull of the stricken submarine S-4. Following a message in telegraphic code to Diver Tom Eadie that six of the imprisoned men were alive, a second possible message came tap-tap-tapping early today to Charles Scott, another diver working on the stern of the helpless sub.

The first message came from the forward torpedo compartment. Although the sounds heard by Scott were quite faint, they were taken to indicate that others of the forty-odd men and officers were alive. Scott was unable to decipher the tapping into a message, however, and it was pointed out that the faint hammering might be the swinging of a chain. Nevertheless rescue measures were speeded with renewed hope.

Meanwhile the pontoons—floating mammoth barrels of air—arrived at the Brooklyn navy yard early today. Herculean efforts were made to adjust them immediately to the sunken sub.

Rescue measures were speeded, for the supply of oxygen dwindles hourly within the sunken vessel. The hammering heard by Eadie, a veritable message from the grave—tap, tap, tap, came forth from within the mystery of the S-4, in telegraphic code.

It told the world that six of the forty-odd men and officers of the helpless sub, lived on—102 feet below the water surface. Perhaps more are breathing. The veteran naval diver, Eadie, hero of the salvage operations on the sunken S-51, obtained an answer to his hammer rapping on the sheath of the undersea vessel after several attempts had failed.

"They have answered my signals and they live," Eadie exclaimed, dripping happiness, as he stepped from the bottom of the sea.

The first question which Eadie tapped in code to the imprisoned men was:

"Is gas bad?"

"No, but air is," the men answered. "How long will you be?"

"We are doing everything possible," Eadie replied. "How many are there?"

"There are six; please hurry," was the answer.

The giant crane, The Century, was standing by today, ready to attempt to raise the living and the Air—preciously lighter than water—is flowing into the ballast tanks of the crippled sub. It is hoped to displace enough water in the sub to lighten the ship and send it to the top. At least it will make the effort of the cranes and the pontoons easier.

A further sombre conversation with the imprisoned men on the S-4 was reported held when the dead from the ocean floor where the submarine was hurled in its collision with the coast guard cutter Paulding Saturday afternoon.

But the sea is storming for its victims. The wind is a growl. A choppy sea, making little mountains and slanting valleys, is running.

PREPAREDNESS IS URGED BY SPEAKER
BEFORE CLUB HERE

Adequate preparedness to safeguard against foreign invasion and to insure domestic peace by protecting against communism was advocated for the United States by Mrs. A. C. Messenger, chairman of the foreign relations committee of the D. A. R., in an address before the weekly meeting of the Xenia Sunday Evening Club at Christ Episcopal Church Parish House Sunday night.

The speaker described the secret growth of communism in this country since the late war, having as its aim the overthrow of the present form of government, and warned against propaganda.

Club members discussed the subject following the talk. The speech was in direct contrast to a talk on "Peace," heard last Sunday.

Light refreshments, prepared by the committee in charge of arrangements, were served preceding the address.

Henry Eavey, chairman of the club, presided at the meeting and appointed a committee on arrangements for succeeding weeks. The club decided not to hold its weekly sessions during the next two weeks because of the Christmas holidays.

SUNDAY SERVICE AT TRINITY OUTSTANDING

Before an audience that filled the church, the choir of Trinity M. E. Church presented one of the most impressive and beautiful programs given for several years, under the capable leadership of Mrs. William H. McGervey.

Trinity's Christmas song service is always looked forward to by music lovers and this year's was particularly beautiful. The soloists were Mrs. Homer Spahr, Mrs. Foy Coffelt, Mrs. Raymond Wolf, Mr. G. F. Dodds, Mr. Leigh Bickett and Mr. W. C. Boyce.

Three tableaux were highlights of the program, dramatizing the part played by the Shepherds, the manger and the Wise Men in the Story of the Birth of the King. The part of the Madonna was taken by Miss Alicia Monroe and the other characters were taken by young people of the church.

The program opened with an organ prelude by Miss Juanita Rankin who furnished splendid accompaniment for the entire program. The candlelight procession, a feature of the Trinity song service, followed and the choir members took their places on the altar. The church was darkened during the processional and during the tableaux.

PLAYLET IS PROGRAM FEATURE OF SOCIETY.

A clever playlet, "Christmas in a Frontier Parsonage," was presented by Mrs. George Street, Mrs. Lester Buell, Mrs. F. C. Bishop, Mrs. Knick and Little Virginia Turnbull when Women's Home Missionary Society, Trinity M. E. Church, was entertained at the home of Mrs. W. R. Bennington, W. Church St., Friday afternoon.

Mrs. E. P. Hamlin, president, conducted the devotion and the business meeting. Mrs. S. M. McKay read the chapter from the study book.

Mrs. Bennington was assisted in serving tea by Mrs. Charles A. Davis, Mrs. Collett, Mrs. S. M. McKay and Mrs. J. P. Fudge.

A PRACTICAL ANSWER

Now come Secretary of Agriculture Jardine, Senator Sackett and other Government authorities with a program for the settlement of the Muscle Shoals question.

In substance, their suggestion is for the Government to lease the power and, with the $2,500,000 or more annual rental derived therefrom, to construct modern nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals and other suitable locations for experimental production of high-grade fertilizers on a commercial scale, and to conduct practical experiments in its use for different crops on different soils.

No one can deny that the public and Congress desire to utilize Muscle Shoals to benefit agriculture without tying the properties up for a long period of years to a doubtful program of fertilizer manufacture.

During the period of ten years since the Muscle Shoals plants were built scientific progress in nitrogen fixation has developed processes which require but small amounts of power. They have rendered the present Muscle Shoals nitrate plants obsolete, and now dominate the world nitrogen situation. These changed conditions would seem to point the way to legislation that will secure cheaper fertilizer ingredients at Muscle Shoals and at the same time permit public use of surplus power for the domestic and industrial needs of a large and growing section of the South.

INSTALLMENT PLAN ENCOURAGES THRIFT

Installment plan buying, attacked by some business leaders as the prime factor in encouraging American families to extravagance, is really proving that the reverse of that charge is true, according to Prof. E. R. A. Seligman, Columbia university economist and noted finance expert, who has just completed a year's survey of installment plan practices.

"Installment credit tends on the whole to strengthen the motives which induce an individual to save, and also tends to increase his capacity to do so," says a summary of Prof. Seligman's conclusions presented in the Review of Reviews.

The economist's survey shows installment plan merchandising, a trivial factor in commerce 20 years ago, to have grown to such proportions that at present there is more than $2,000,000,000 worth of installment credit paper—approximately one-tenth of the national debt—outstanding.

More than half of these promissory notes represent credit of automobile purchasers, Prof. Seligman reports. He finds the installment plan a major factor in the motor industry's growth, since six out of every ten automobiles sold today are bought on a standard plan of one-third of the total price down with the remainder in 12 monthly payments. The resulting high production and employment figures of the industry have their parallels in other fields similarly affected by the installment plan, he says.

Installment selling, instead of simply advancing the time when demands become effective, really leads to an increase of purchasing power. The device of fractional payments results in an actual increase of production."

FORD, WORK AND WAR

Henry Ford makes a wise observation when he says that work is a cure for war. Any nation which is as busy as America, is not likely to get into war. Unemployment and idleness breed revolution and war. Work is the best tonic for nations, as it is for individuals. The brain and the body were meant for activity. Idleness is an unnatural state.

PLAY

Play may not be doing you any good. It depends on how you do it. If you play bridge for high stakes and take the game very seriously you are using up as much nervous energy as in hard work. Golf, tennis, and all other games can be played so long and hard and taken so seriously that they do not furnish recreation. Play has to do with the mind as well as the body. If we can not relax in play we might as well stay at work.

THEY'RE DOING WELL

A rich man, leaving a large sum of money, says in his will that the class most worthy of help is that composed of girls who are earning their own living.

He reasons strangely. Girls who are not earning their own living are getting less out of life and need help more. Girls who earn their own living are independent. Too bad that great bequests can not be made in the form of ambition and opportunity. With plenty of ambition and opportunity money becomes an incidental.

NO FACTS

Glib talkers may have doorknob heads. Somebody is always ready to run down churches—to say the church has filed. Last year the good-will industries of one church—the Methodist—sold more than a million seven hundred thousand dollars worth of mended furniture and paid the bulk of the money to the deaf and dumb, the blind and crippled, and the industrial misfits who worked in its shops.

We seem doomed to hear the most criticism from those who know best what they are talking about.

NEW WORLDS

The accidental starting and stopping of a toy train by radio has given scientists something new to think about. The radiation of power over long distances will some day be a reality. There is something thrilling in the knowledge that we live on the edge of an undiscovered world—a new world of applied science.

The Daybook

OF A

New Yorker

—By—
BURTON RASCOE

NEW YORK, Dec. 19.—This Christmas spirit is a strange spirit and wondrous affair. Tens of thousands elbow their brothers in the market places, buying everything from tinsel to tiaras. . . . Clerks stand on swollen, weary feet from one harried day's end to the other. . . . Little children are dragged, flustered and excited, to see the four-hundred-and-eleven edition of Kris Kingle. The little woman buys friend husband a velvet house coat he'll never wear, and charges it on the dread January account. . . . The blue fir trees thoughtfully placed by landscape gardeners all over Westchester county front lawns bloom out starting with red and gold electric bulbs, "living Christmas trees" to gladden the heart of the save-a-tree guild. . . . The ten-cent store clerks snarl at you over the tissue paper counter, and pray for a better job before another year rolls around again.

They tell a wry one about John D. Rockefeller and a check he wrote in payment for dinner at a New York hotel. The waiter, following routine orders, took John D.'s check to the cashier for a. k. a. social, that his multi-millionaire customer wasn't a guest of the hotel. The cashier had been bawled out before for cashing checks for transients, and he hemmed and hawed about it. Then he said that if George the dining room captain, would write a. k. a. on the back of the check, he'd let it go through. George did. And he is still proud of the fact that his signature saved the famous dime dispenser from embarrassment. It is a well-known trick of the fabulously rich, not to carry any cash on the person. I know several millionaires who seldom have taxi fare. Maybe that's how they got where they are today.

I'm glad to see the girls are wearing snapper gossies this year. The collegiate femmes in racoon coats managed to ride about the handbags of the old-fashioned, buckled variety of overshoe, but when such a foot covering was worn along with a good-looking outfit on Fifth avenue, it certainly struck a parring note. Now the close-fitting beige and wray overshoes catch the eye pleasantly, and the lady commuters, I fancy, are happier.

They have small boys in the most dapper uniforms to take charge of the lesser luggage at the Mayfair, in Park avenue. These diminutive "buttons" look not a day over 12 years old, and their presence there seems to me to be more in the nature of atmosphere than anything else, since other attendants, full grown, carry up the big bags.

IRISH PREACHERS AND POVERTY

Even if I'm hung for saying so, I'm coming to feel considerable distrust for Irish churches.

Poverty in an Irish village often appears to be somewhat in proportion to the number of churches it supports. At any rate, there is evidence that the churches and preachers are getting more from the masses of the people than the people are getting from the churches and preachers.

In one village of some 1,500 inhabitants, I discovered that there were exactly four fine big homes in the whole town—four comfortable big houses with a few acres of landscaped vrooms, servants and other evidences of comparative luxury. Just four such good places, mind you, and every one occupied by a preacher!

By way of contrast, I paused at the doorway of a three-room cottage within walking distance of these finer homes, to ask road directions of a comely, flaxen-haired maiden who sat on the step making lace. Her name, I recall, was Minnie.

She seemed to be expert at making Irish point lace, but because of modern styles in women's underwear, such work is no longer very profitable. Most of the time she works in the spinning mills—the same mills my dad used to work in—and being capable of operating a machine, she receives a little more than many other girls employed there—about $5 a week. I asked her if she went to church and dropped part of her wages in the contribution box.

"Oh, yes," she replied, "I always give what I can."

Since whatever she gives, no matter how little, must mean a real sacrifice, I thought of the village where the preachers live in style and comfort. And I kept wondering if the goods these men or the churches deliver is worth to Minnie what she pays for it. Just what are they doing to justify their upkeep?

I wondered, too, if any of these ministers of the gospel chances to have a sense of humor. If so, what does he think, and how vigorously does he gauge his tongue into his cheek, when he prepares a sermon, say, about camels and the eyes of needles?

What a comfort it must be to his flock, nearly all under-fed, to learn direct from one who is enjoying the luxuries they themselves are better off, with far better chance for entraining the kingdom of heaven, because of their poverty!

WHEN GOOD FELLOWS GET TOGETHER

Living and Loving

By MRS. VIRGINIA LEE

TAKES TWO TO MAKE FRIENDSHIP

One person cannot create a friendship any more than one can make a quarrel. Both sides must be at least "willing." So don't set your heart on a friendship with a member of the opposite sex unless you know the other party also is anxious for it.

"Dear Mrs. Lee: I have read your advice in the paper right along, and I would like to get a little advice from you about my girl friend. I have met two boys that I love dearly. We had been with them about a month and the boys told us to write to them as they were leaving town. We wrote and they never answered our letters. Please advise us what to do. How can we keep their friendship?"

Wait, awhile, girls, and maybe, when the boys get a bit settled they will write. But if you don't hear, the best thing is to forget them. You'll be surprised how well you can get along without them after a short time.

Two letters, both too long to print, have been received from "Od Fashioned." I'll give part of one and the answers, and hope she won't mind.

"Dear Mrs. Lee: I'm 22 years old and go everywhere with two girl friends. We're inseparable. One of the girls likes to flirt, and I detest it. Do you think it rude of me to keep telling this girl about it? I'm afraid men will think we're 'street walkers.' She tells me I'm too old-fashioned."

"Old-Fashioned." As long as your girl friend understands thoroughly that you disapprove of her conduct I would not nag at her. You needn't be seen with her if she persists, and you might mention that to her. As to the young men you speak of in your second letter, I suppose they are just boys.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS

Letters from Readers to Readers
In today's mail I have a letter from Mrs. D. who used to have Psoriasis and was cured by advice similar to that I give—ultraviolet or ordinary sun rays, right diet, 5 per cent salicylic ointment for the scales, etc. She enclosed a very encouraging letter to Miss W., whose sister was terribly discouraged by her Psoriasis.

Not infrequently when I publish excerpts from the correspondents' letters telling of certain troubles, those who have been similarly afflicted send me letters telling of their help, either by following my advice or that of some other source, to send to the writers.

I certainly appreciate the kindly spirit of helpfulness that prompts these letters, and so would the patient. However, dear followers, the letters with their addresses are destroyed after we have gone through them, so I regret it is impossible for me to forward your communications.

Thank you, Mrs. D., for writing and letting us know your good results. And thank you for your interest in Miss M.'s sister.

pose, strictly speaking, you should wait for him to ask you to call, but I cannot see any real reason why you should not give him the invitation instead of telephoning.

The next question is more serious. What course should a girl pursue if the boy in whom she is interested is mixed up in a scandal with another girl?

"Dear Mrs. Lee: I am a girl of 19 and have been going around fifth a boy for a little over a year. A short time ago he was involved in a scandal with another girl. I would like to have advice on whether or not I should keep up the friendship. I still love him, and am positive he loves me."

So much depends on circumstances, Ruth. If he has acted dishonorably toward a girl you surely would not wish to continue in his company, especially if the other girl loves and wants him. But if he is not to blame, or at least not in that way, and needs your understanding friendship, you should not desert him.

One of our readers writes this information, thinking it may help some of our lonely readers who are in Brooklyn, N. Y., now or are likely to be.

"My Dear Mrs. Lee: I would like to say that a Brooklyn branch of the Slow Club has been organized under the supervision of Susan Chester, of a Brooklyn paper. Membership may be had by applying to Mrs. S. Haneles, 591 Williams avenue, Brooklyn. All those from 18 years and old up may join, and those between 16 and 18 may join with permission of their parents. Hoping this information will help, I remain, B. N."

Thank you very much, B. N., this may encourage others to form clubs in which to draw lonely folks.

Scalloped oysters make a splendid "main dish" for Sunday supper—or for any other supper, for that matter. It is a dish that always calls for a sharp tasting salad, pickles or jelly. It is also well to have catsup or horseradish on the table when it is served. Weak vinegar might be used in place of the lemon juice in the cabbage salad if better liked or more convenient.

DOUBLE TIES FOR THIS COUPLE

DETROIT, Mich., Dec. 17.—A young couple appeared before Phil Birkenhauer, marriage license clerk. "We want this knot tied doubly tight," said the man. Birkenhauer thought for a while. With companionate marriage and such being in vogue now he couldn't make out what the man wanted. He consulted Judges Norbert Ramey and William A. Cuff of municipal court. After some deliberation both judges agreed to speak in unison while reading the marriage ceremony, thus tying the knot doubly tight. That's what the couple wanted.

Such things as mineral oil and agar are good to tide you over until your intestinal tract is regulated to empty itself regularly, and it will not be so regulated until you sufficient bulk in your diet. Sufficient bulk for most people is not secured unless the rougher whole grains products are used and one and one-half to two pounds of fruits and vegetables are taken daily. Behind the Scenes in Washington

By CHARLES P. STEWART

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18.—The row between President Coolidge and Secretary of the Treasury Mellon, on one side, and "big business," as spoken for by the Chamber of Commerce of the U. S. A., on the other hand, over the question of tax reduction, really is this season's prime sensation in Washington.

President Coolidge, "big business" and Secretary Mellon always have been regarded here as practically synonymous terms. To have them start another is enough to give anybody a shock.

Swearing is about what it amounts to—not literal curs words, but as close to 'em as technically parliamentary language permits.

The report keeps floating around that Secretary of Commerce Hoover furnished the inspiration for the Commerce Chamber's demand of a $400,000,000 tax cut. There's no way of testing this yarn, for if Hoover did give the chamber its hunch, he certainly did it exceedingly on the q. t. Nevertheless, it's one of those stories which would be mighty interesting if true, because it would imply the equivalent of the sticking of a pin into Secretary Mellon, by Secretary Hoover—about an inch.

As between cabinet members, all must agree that this would be a noteworthy event.

It was President Coolidge who originally mentioned $225,000,000 as the maximum tax cut it would be safe to make this winter, but of course he got his figures from Secretary Mellon, which was right and proper—his recognized financial expert.

Thus we commit Secretary Mellon to a $225,000,000 estimate. Now, if we thought Hoover, thought the Chamber of Commerce of the U. S. A., to allege a $175,000,000 error in Mellon's reckoning, we place Hoover in the position of imputing to Mellon no merely trifling inaccuracy.

It's to be borne in mind that American "big business" and American "high finance" are no longer, to all intents and purposes, the same thing that once they were.

That accounts for some of these disagreements that seem rather queer at first glance. Time was when American bankers put their money into American business, and nothing else. Time was when American business depended on American bankers, or went broke.

Today plenty of American bankers have bigger interests abroad than they have here at home. Today lots of American business have all the money they want, to look after their own requirements, and bankers can go hang, for all they care.

Look at our tariff sentiment! American banking and American industries were a unit, on protection—once.

The industries—except a few, which have developed export, are as protectionistic as ever. Our international bankers are beginning to discover that protection's "economically unsound."

"Does the idea mix with tax reduction?"

"Hoover's pre-eminently representative of American industries, Mellon of American banking, on an international scale."

Taxes, tariff protection, and war debts are a jumble. Does Mellon or Hoover or anybody see his way through it—even 'as though a glass, darkly'—yet?

The thought's in its formative stage. Maybe this session of congress will give it some shape.

How to Achieve Beauty

By MME. HELENA RUBINSTEIN

MASSAGE FOR BEAUTIFUL HANDS

Hands respond so quickly to intelligent care, that I feel there is no excuse for any woman to have hands that are not as well as things of beauty in themselves.

Much can be done with massage to improve the shape and elasticity of your hands. That they can be made white and attractive in texture goes without saying. Today I am going to concentrate on their line, form and gracefulness.

Wash your hands with a good cream. One made by a pasteurized process is especially good for relieving the tension of tired, nervous hands and for increasing the effectiveness of massage. Wring your hands for a minute or two to get the cream well worked in. Then pretend that you are putting on imaginary gloves, massaging down each finger separately and then up the palm and wrist toward the arm. To taper your fingers and stretch them to their greatest length, to make them slim and graceful—pull out along each one separately with a considerable pressure and pinch at the sides of each nail.

Rub a liberal supply of cream into your knuckles, and massage around them with a rotary movement. Knuckles, like the elbows, are only too likely to be dark spots on the landscape if you do not give them proper care.

Stretch between the fingers of each hand with the other hand. Then relax your arms and shake your hands from the wrists, just as if you were trying to shake them off. I am getting a little away from the subject of massage, but exercise can aid massage so much in achieving beauty of hands, that I feel I must say a word about them here. A good exercise for suppleness is to dove-tail your fingers, then push the palms outward as far as you can stretch. Or clench your fists as tight as you can, then stretch your fingers apart until they become numb with the strain, and clench again.

A particularly good time to work on your hands is when you first wake up in the morning. Put on the cream and spend a few minutes, that you would ordinarily take in dozing, massaging your hands. You will find that it not only beautifies your hands, but makes you feel biter all over.

Peter's Adventure

The four little Brown Bees unfurled their wings and made ready to depart. Cotton-Tail raised a trembling paw to stop them.

"Wait a minute, oh, just one minute, please!" squeaked the frightened fellow. "I have lifted my ears in vain. Not a whisper do I hear. Remember I am 'way down here in the matted grasses, where I can neither see nor scent—that I have only heels to depend upon, not wings to carry me from danger, as have you. Where, oh, where is Growly? Tell me so that I may hurry off in the other direction."

Buzz-Fuzz dropped upon a downy thistle-blow, close to the Rabbit's side.

"Stand on your hind legs, Cotton-Tail!" commanded she. The young Rabbit did as he was told.

"Now, point your pink nose toward the white birch that grows by the pasture brook—see, like a

Cotton-Tail leaped into the air as though he had been shot.

"Follow my nose I shall have to, but not the way you told me to point it, if you please. 'Tis right about face for me! Oh, dear, oh, dear me! I must hurry. Growly might not eat me, but he would scare me to death, and one fate would be quite as bad as the other. I simply can't get back to the burrow fast enough!"

Hop! Skip! Jump! Wings could have taken Cotton-Tale toward safety no more swiftly than did his fleet feet. Across the clover patch, a spot of fluff bobbing up and down in the far-off pasture, and Cotton-Tail was lost to sight among the tall grasses.

"What in the world makes Cotton-Tail so afraid of Growly? The big Brown Bear would rather dine on berries than Bunnies, wouldn't he?" Peter turned to ask the question of the Bees, but the four brown flyers were winning their way through the sunlight without a word of farewell Cotton-Tail had scurried to safety, and the four loyal work bees had set off to find their queen. Peter was alone, and it didn't take him long to make up his mind that if he didn't want to meet Growly the Bear it was high time that he, too, made his way home from the meadow!

PUCKET SHOWS SPEED

VANCOUVER, B. C., Dec. 17.—The modern tendency of speed is becoming apparent also among hens, according to a pet in Northern British Columbia. Hatched during below-zero weather, in February she laid her first egg in July and became brooder during September. When her owner, W. L. Padden, attempted to break her from broodiness the bird displayed will of her own and disappeared. She returned to the flock recently leading six lucky chicks she had hatched in a nest she built in near-by brush.

REPORT SIX ALIVE; BELIEVE MORE MAY BE ENTOMBED ALIVE

submarine S-8, her sister ship, was reported as "certainly" alive in the S-4. "Certain men are alive in the S-4. Everybody in the battery compartment is certainly dead. Just how many died altogether is a matter of speculation.

"There may have been three or four men on duty in the battery chamber. But the crew in quarters are there and perhaps there were more.

"The S-4 is now lying on a muddy bottom, 101 feet long. We have attached a line to it and will now concentrate on pouring air into her.

They are using an innovation in diving operations in this latest naval tragedy. It is a "bird cage" to lower the divers, a square platform with an iron post at each corner.

Eadie, on his historic trip below which established communication with those alive, was dropped by stages to the water bottom.

A telephone line with a microphone attachment parallels the divers cable. A youthful sailor with an ear-piece and a mouth phone, sat at the top of the deck of the falcon. He must listen, listen without fail, on pain of court martial.

Eadie had been down about fifteen minutes when the youth stiffened. Officers, alertly watching his face, hurried over to him. They heard him shout excitedly down the tube to Eadie.

"They're answering," His superiors heard him repeat his findings and then tuned in themselves. "Tap, tap, tap" came from the microphone glued to the sunken submarine's side.

Eadie on his return to the surface an hour later also reported that the battery compartment on the starboard side of the S-4 was in a bad way and that the conning tower had been torn off.

E. J. Carr, another diver, was then sent below to prod into the conning tower and attach an air hose to displace the water.

The Paulding was patrolling in the vicinity of Cape Cod on the afternoon of December 17," said Captain W. Malloy, of the coast guard cutter Tampa, in describing the collision between the destroyer and the submarine.

"There was good visibility and a good wind. The first intimation of the presence of a submarine was when her conning tower and periscope emerged from the water directly in front of the Paulding. It was too close for the Paulding to avoid, though the helm was shifted and full speed given."

"The Paulding struck the submarine at the conning tower which ripped a hole in the under body of the Paulding. Then, the submarine, rolling over, showed her stern and sank. The Paulding immediately lowered a life boat for use in case any survivors emerged from the sunken boat and dropped a buoy to mark the spot. The Paulding was filling with water but managed to get into Provincetown Harbor."

Captain Malloy said that the Paulding was on patrol duty and going at the time about fifteen knots per hour. He said that the submarine's battery compartment probably was pierced.

Lieutenant Commander J. S. Bayless of the Paulding, said:

"Ensign George Phannemiller was on watch and the Paulding was doing fifteen knots per hour and so far as is known was going at one third speed. Phannemiller sighted what he thought was a fishing stick, used to mark nets. The helm was shifted to avoid the stick and it was then that Ensign Phannemiller sighted the conning tower of the submarine. The crash followed and the submarine turned over and sank bow first at an angle of forty-five degrees."

Farm Notes

EXPECT NEW RECORD

Co-operative livestock agencies are expected to make an all-time record during December for a month's volume of business, according to reports received here from the livestock marketing department of the Ohio Farm Bureau Federation. The increase in volume is credited to a special campaign of education on co-operative livestock marketing put on by the state and county farm bureau field service and the Ohio Livestock Co-operative Association.

For the week ending December 10, a total of 644 decks of livestock were handled by co-operative agencies supported by Ohio farmers. These agencies include co-operative commission associations at Buffalo, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, and a direct selling and purchasing unit operating at these points and at Columbus.

Of the terminal agencies, the co-operative at Buffalo handled the largest volume, while the farmers' agency at Cleveland sold more than a third of the consignments to that market. Cincinnati at Pittsburgh and at Cincinnati far exceeded their volume of the same week a year ago.

Sixty-six decks of livestock were sold during the week directly from country points to packers, a method of co-operative marketing in which Ohio livestock interests are pioneering.

Not only have shipments to market increased, but the total co-operative purchases of feeder livestock through co-operative channels for this season is 308 decks, much more than double the amount last year.

In the course of the campaign more than a hundred meetings of livestock producers have been held over the state at which information was distributed on market grades, relation of production to marketing, and other topics.

CHAPTER XL

There never yet was a woman in love who was not actually beside herself with jealousy at times. And Lily France was exactly that as she stood facing Pat, her husband, to the point of frenzy. Her face was white, and her eyes looked black as they blazed at him. Her breath came unevenly.

"Do you mean to say that you've just left that Ertz creature—and then dared to come home to me?" she asked him, putting her hands to her throat. It felt tight, and as if it were filled with fluff; her heart beat suffocatingly.

"Where else would I come but home to you?" Pat asked, reasonably enough. He was very calm. "This is my home, isn't it? And you're my wife, after all."

Lily gave a laugh that sounded like a sob. "Yes," she said bitterly. "But I don't know how long this is going to be your home—or how much longer I'm going to be your wife."

She let that sink in, and then she rushed on: "Don't fool yourself into thinking that you're the only one of us who's sick and tired of this marriage, Pat. France! Don't think that I'm not just as attractive to other men as you are to that Ertz lecher! Don't think that I haven't plenty of chances to step out, myself, because I have!"

Pat frowned—not angrily, but in a thoughtful, puzzled way. He closed the hall door behind him and stood with his shoulders against it. He took her by both of her wrists and pulled her close to him, looking hard at her.

"Now, what do you mean by that?" he wanted to know. Lily smiled at him scornfully. "That my darling husband," she said, "is some more of my own business!"

And, with a sudden twist of her shoulders, she wrenched herself away from him and flew into the bedroom, slamming and locking the door behind her.

She threw herself down across her bed, sobbing hysterically into the pillows. Above the sound of her crying she heard Pat knocking on the door and begging her to let him come in.

Now and then she caught bits of what he was saying—"at least throw me my pajamas and a comforter"—"sleep on the couch, but I've got to sleep somewhere—"

And then more kindly, "Lily, please, don't be so stubborn. I'm sorry about the whole thing. I'll be quiet and won't bother you any more. I'll be in the living room, and presently she heard him go down the hall.

She sat up then in the shaft of moonlight that lay across the bed in a wide band of silver. Pat and that Ertz walking along in that silvery light, under the leafless trees, side by side! She thought of them that way and her sobs broke out again. Pat and that horrid little woman!

Then the whole flat seemed to shake with the sound of the front door being violently closed. Through the thin walls came the faint echo of footsteps on the stairs—then the dull thud of the street door being slammed.

"Pat's gone!" Lily said to herself, hardly believing it. Like a shot she was off the bed and out in the tiny sitting room.

She flung up the window and leaned out into the night. Yes, there he was, going down the street, a gray shadow against the deeper gray shadows of the darkness.

But where was he going? "To his father's house, I suppose," Lily decided. Or else back to the Jettersons! She hated the Jettersons more at that moment than she ever had known she could hate anyone. She loathed both of them—Sadie and Roy—simply because they were friends of the Ertzs.

She closed the window and turned back into the silent room. All at once she was afraid to be there, alone in it.

There was a kind of wild, unreasoning terror that sometimes comes to women alone in houses at night, swept over her like an icy wave, leaving her cold and shivering.

It took every bit of her courage to walk back down the hall and into the dark bedroom. When she had turned on the light she felt better, but she knew she could not stay in the place all night.

"I'd die of fright—and they'd find me with pure white hair in the morning," she said to herself, and began to pack an overnight bag with panic-stricken haste. "I'll go to a hotel if it takes my last penny."

In five minutes she was dressed and out in the street. Then, just as she started for the corner, she discovered that she had forgotten her handbag with all her money in it—all of her money being the $15 that Pat had given her the night before.

For an instant she thought of running down to the janitor and asking him to go into the flat for the handbag. Then something else flashed into her mind.

Why not go to the France family for a few blocks away, and it would do them all good to know what a rotten trick Pat had played upon her!

"They think he's so wonderful," she said to herself, scornfully, starting along the sidewalks under the October moon. "I'll just show him up!"

The little house was wrapped in darkness when she reached it. But as she opened the front gate, with its rusty squeak, a light shone out from two of the upper windows. By the time Lily reached the porch, Mrs. France had the front door open and was standing just inside the hall.

She was wearing a faded Canton flannel kimono, and her gray hair was in two funny little braids upon her shoulders. "I saw you coming when you passed the lamp post," she whispered, drawing the girl into the house. "I was just kneeling down by the window to say my prayers."

Her blue eyes were filled with gentle curiosity. "What's happened?" she asked softly. "You and Pat have had a quarrel, I suppose." Lily gave a start. "I'll bet Pat's here!" she cried. "He's probably told you all about it, and you think it's my fault. But it wasn't—"

"He's not here," Pat's mother interrupted softly. "And I haven't any reason to think it was anybody's fault. I was a bride once myself, and I know what these little spats are between two young married people. They don't mean a thing—and I don't want you to talk about it tonight. You'll just say a lot of things that you'll be sorry for in the morning." She put her arms around the girl and drew her towards the staircase.

"Now, you just run up and climb into bed in the spare room," she added. "And when you wake up starting along the sidewalks under the October moon. 'I'll just show him up!'"

Her blue eyes were filled with gentle curiosity. "What's happened?" she asked softly. "You and Pat have had a quarrel, I suppose."

EARLY MORNING GROCERY BLAZE CAUSES HEAVY LOSS ON SUNDAY

Damage estimated at between $500 and $800 was caused by fire, thought to have resulted from an explosion in the rear of a grocery at 924 E. Main St., of which Gus Roan, colored, is proprietor, at 2:03 a. m., Sunday.

The blaze was confined to the rear room of the building by efforts of firemen and much of the damage was caused by smoke. The two-story frame building is owned by the Rev. Mr. Purnell, Columbus, O.

Samuel Taylor, a neighbor, was awakened by the crackling of burning timber and turned in the alarm. Firemen found the interior ablaze when they arrived and dense clouds of smoke hindered their efforts. All windows on the first floor were broken in order to reach the flames.

A check has not been made on the damage to the stock of groceries but the loss is expected to be large. It is not covered by insurance on the contents.

Origin of the fire is not certain, according to Fire Chief William Hanifan. The blaze may have been caused by an intruder who intended to rob the store, or by an explosion resulting from spontaneous combustion as the rear room contained a quantity of gasoline. Damage to the building was not great.

Firemen had the flames under control in less than an hour. No damage resulted from a chimney flue being burned at the residence of Mrs. Bertha Hirsch, 230 S. Chestnut St., at 9:30 o'clock Saturday night. This residence is owned by E. G. White.

BROTHER OF XENIAN CLAIMED SUDDENLY BY DEATH SATURDAY

Jesse M. Wilkins, 48, former resident of Xenia and well known in this vicinity, died at his home on Wellington Drive, Dayton, O., from acute dilation of the heart Saturday night at 11:30 o'clock.

Mr. Wilkins had apparently been enjoying the best of health and his death came suddenly soon after he had retired for the night.

He was born in Ross County, March 18, 1879, and lived in Xenia for ten or twelve years before moving to Brookville, where he conducted a general store for several years until his health failed. Recovering his health, he became identified with the Piqua Marble Co. as traveling salesman and had made his home in Dayton for the past seven years.

Surviving is his widow, Rachel, one brother, E. J. Wilkins, 2 W. Market St., this city; and four sisters, Mrs. Frank Snyder, Miami, Fla.; Mrs. A. R. Bowman, Columbus, O.; Mrs. Meda Thornhill, Washington, C. H.; and Miss Etta Wilkins, Dayton, O.

Brief funeral services will be held at the residence at 11:30 o'clock Wednesday morning and again at the Christian Church at Washington, C. H., in the afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. Burial will be made in that city.

NEW YORK CITY—A sprightly and costly repartee took place in Justice Callaghan's court when an attorney objected to having the case of his client adjourned. "But your honor, I don't want an adjournment," protested the attorney. "Be quiet," admonished the judge. "But I want my case to go on." "You are fined $25 for contempt of court." "Well, then I might as well say what I was going to say." "Your fine is now $75 more." "Does that mean $100 altogether?" "It certainly does," the judge assured him.

FRIENDLY ENEMIES

LONDON, England—A dog's remarkable friendship for a kitten was recently told by the owner of a terrier and a kitten. The kitten became ill and was taken to a clinic for treatment. The dog was inconsolable. Then two weeks later the dog disappeared. Early next morning, however, an imperious scratching at the front door awakened the owner, who, on opening it, found his dog vigorously wagging his tail and carrying the kitten in his mouth. How the dog found his missing playmate could not be learned.

Alleged Degenerate Being Quizzed While Search Continues—Reward Totals More Than $50,000—Woman Latest Suspect

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 19.—Four thousand police officers of southern California today continued their search for the kidnaper and slayer of 12-year-old Marian Parker, whose mutilated torso Saturday night was returned to her father, Perry M. Parker, bank official, upon payment of $1,500 ransom.

Excitement, already at white heat, was intensified by the finding of a note threatening the life of Marjorie Parker, the slain girl's twin-sister. This note, police reported early today, had been placed by a man in a fire alarm box in Hollywood, and the alarm turned in. A heavy guard was immediately thrown around the Parker home.

All police officers in Los Angeles have been placed on sixteen-hour duty in the search for the slayer of the little girl.

Citizens have offered a total of more than $50,000 reward money for the arrest and conviction of the slayer. At periods during yesterday and last night appeals broadcast by radio brought in an average of $50 a minute. Today is expected to see the rewards reach a sum unprecedented in the history of this region.

A suspect, one of scores questioned, is still being detained here. He is held on suspicion of grand theft. Police withheld his name, but he was said to be the 25-year-old son of a local physician. It was said he had been suspected of crimes against children in the past.

Release of a suspect held at Las Vegas, Nev., was directed in a telegram sent by local police late last night. This man, proceeding by stage from Los Angeles to St. Louis, was detained at Las Vegas because of information he had paid his fare in $20 bills, the entire amount of the $1500 ransom money being in bills of that denomination.

A suitcase was found a block from the place where, Saturday night, the child's father paid over $1500 to recover his daughter who, he believed, still was alive and uninjured. In the suitcase were found towels stained with blood, newspapers bearing similar stains, wire thread like that which had been

CINCINNATI, O., Dec. 19.—Drama the like of which even the stage has seldom seen will be enacted in criminal court today when George Remus stands before a jury and pleads his own case.

It will be the closing argument of the amazing man who, as an attorney, is defending himself for shooting his wife to death in Eden Park on October 6 last, when she was on her way to court to divorce him.

Facing the floor before the jury of men and women will be Remus the lawyer. In his empty chair in the prisoner's dock will be the visionary figure of Remus, the defendant.

At his elbow, garbed in black will be Remus, 24-year-old daughter of the defendant by his first wife who divorced him when he fell in love with Imogene Holmes prior to embarking upon his astounding bootleg adventures.

"Remus hopes to make this closing address the masterpiece of his career before the bar," said Remus, talking as usual in the third person. "In one year in Chicago Remus defended eighteen persons on the charge of murder, and obtained eighteen consecutive acquittals."

"And now Remus, fighting the most vital case of all to him, hopes to do as well for himself. Remus, however, is not too optimistic. It always has been his policy to take the pessimistic view, and that is the view he is taking now."

Remus said he would take as his text as a biblical quotation, from Deuteronomy, which follows: "If a man be found lying with a woman married to another husband, then they shall both of them die, both the man that lay with the woman and the woman; so shall thou put away evil from Israel."

ARMED BANDITS HIT GROCERY MANAGER; ESCAPE MINUS LOOT

J. A. Wipert Victim Of Hold-up Second Time In Six Weeks

Police were searching Monday for two masked thugs, who were reported to have held up and attacked John A. Wipert, manager of The Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co., branch store, Main and West Sts., at the entrance to his garage at his home on Harbline Ave., at midnight, Saturday.

Wipert told police that he and his wife were about to put their automobile in the garage for the night, when one of the men touched him on the back. He turned to look into the barrel of a pistol held by one of the men. Both were masked and faces, with slits cut for eyes by stockings pulled over their eyes.

Neither of the hold-up men spoke but Wipert said: "I haven't any money—you can search me." Mrs. Wipert ran toward the house screaming. The man with the gun struck Wipert on the side of the head, inflicting a cut, and both ran.

Wipert was not seriously hurt. He reported the attack to police and his injury was dressed by Dr. A. D. DeHaven at Police Headquarters. One stitch was required to close a scalp wound.

Both men were described as tall and heavy set but only a meager description could be furnished police.

The holdup Saturday night marked the second time in the last six weeks Mr. and Mrs. Wipert have been victims of bandits. On the first occasion two hold-up men gained entrance to the grocery store at Main and West Sts. on the pretext of making a purchase after the store had been closed and escaped with a large sum of money.

A suspect was later arrested at Clarkburg, W. Va., and returned to Xenia. Both Mr. and Mrs. Wipert positively identified the suspect as one of the robbers but the Clarkburg man was acquitted of a robbery indictment by a jury and was freed.

The holdup Saturday night marked the second time in the last six weeks Mr. and Mrs. Wipert have been victims of bandits. On the first occasion two hold-up men gained entrance to the grocery store at Main and West Sts. on the pretext of making a purchase after the store had been closed and escaped with a large sum of money.

A suspect was later arrested at Clarkburg, W. Va., and returned to Xenia. Both Mr. and Mrs. Wipert positively identified the suspect as one of the robbers but the Clarkburg man was acquitted of a robbery indictment by a jury and was freed.

Both men were described as tall and heavy set but only a meager description could be furnished police.

REPORT SIX ALIVE, BELIEVE MORE MAY BE ENTOMBED ALIVE

"Air Bad" Survivors Tell Divers By Tapping Morse Code—Second Tapping May Indicate Others Of 40 Victims Are Living

PROVINCETOWN, Mass., Dec. 19.—Rescue operations for the crew of the sunken United States submarine S-4, which were stopped by a forty-five mile gale, will be resumed between 4 and 5 o'clock this afternoon.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—Chill, biting winds, coming out of the northwest and whipping the upper Atlantic to heavy waves, is seriously retarding the heroic attempts that are being made to rescue the six men known to be still alive in the tomb-like hull of the submarine S-4.

This official report to the navy department this morning from Rear Admiral Frank H. Brumby, aboard the U. S. S. Falcon, off Provincetown, Mass., diminished hopes here that it will be possible to save the men.

"Sea entirely too rough for diving and is getting worse," was Admiral Brumby's pessimistic message to the department.

PROVINCETOWN, Mass., Dec. 19.—Hope of saving the known six who are gasping their lives away in the cramped torpedo room on the sunken submarine S-4, a hundred feet below the surface of the pitching Atlantic, dwindled today when the hundreds of rescue workers, divers, engineers and scores of salvaging ships were laid idle by high seas and extreme cold.

Arrival of the huge air filled pontoons which were to be used in bringing the disabled craft to the surface had buoyed up spirits of the rescuers early in the day, but the workers were forced to surrender, as the day wore on to the mountainous winter seas.

PROVINCETOWN, Mass., Dec. 19.—Many are dead but six men—perhaps others—are alive today in the hull of the stricken submarine S-4. Following a message in telegraphic code to Diver Tom Eadie that six of the imprisoned men were alive, a second possible message came tap-tap-tapping early today to Charles Scott, another diver working on the stern of the helpless sub.

The first message came from the forward torpedo compartment. Although the sounds heard by Scott were quite faint, they were taken to indicate that others of the forty-odd men and officers were alive. Scott was unable to decipher the tapping into a message, however, and it was pointed out that the faint hammering might be the swinging of a chain. Nevertheless rescue measures were speeded with renewed hope.

Meanwhile the pontoons—floating mammoth barrels of air—arrived at the Brooklyn navy yard early today. Herculean efforts were made to adjust them immediately to the sunken sub.

Rescue measures were speeded, for the supply of oxygen dwindles hourly within the sunken vessel. The hammering heard by Eadie, a veritable message from the grave—tap, tap, came forth from within the mystery of the S-4, in telegraphic code.

It told the world that six of the forty-odd men and officers of the helpless sub, lived on—102 feet below the water surface. Perhaps more are breathing. The veteran naval diver, Eadie, hero of the salvage operations on the sunken S-51, obtained an answer to his hammer rapping on the sheath of the undersea vessel after several attempts had failed.

"They have answered my signals and they live," Eadie exclaimed, dripping happiness, as he stepped from the bottom of the sea.

The first question which Eadie tapped in code to the imprisoned men was:

"Is gas bad?"

"No, but air is," the men answered. "How long will you be?"

"We are doing everything possible," Eadie replied. "How many are there?"

"There are six; please hurry," was the answer.

The giant crane, The Century, was standing by today, ready to attempt to raise the living and the dead. Air—preciously lighter than water—is flowing into the ballast tanks of the crippled sub. It is hoped to displace enough water in the sub to lighten the ship and send it to the top. At least it will make the effort of the cranes and the pontoons easier.

A further sombre conversation with the imprisoned men on the S-4 was reported held when the dead from the ocean floor where the submarine was hurled in its collision with the coast guard cutter Paulding Saturday afternoon.

But the sea is storming for its victims. The wind is a howl. A choppy sea, making little mountains and slanting valleys, is running.

Officials were greatly cheered today over the Sunday reports that at least six men were alive in the motor compartment of the vessel yesterday. Secretary of the Navy Wilbur, who remained at his desk at the navy department most of Sunday, immediately telephoned the good news to President Coolidge at the White House.

From descriptions of the accident and the damage to the hull, navy experts are inclined to believe there is not much hope for the other members of the crew.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—A court of inquiry to determine responsibility for the tragic sinking of the submarine S-4 will get under way just as such as the present rescue operations are concluded, navy officials said today.

Until the bulk of the undersea boat can be raised from the sea floor, and the stories of survivors—if there are to be any—can be obtained, navy officials are withholding comment as to the responsibility for the crash. Coast guard officials, whose destroyers Paulding rammed the submarine, are similarly silent, awaiting developments.

Overnight reports to the navy from the scene of the rescue operations off the Massachusetts coast told of the enormous difficulties under which the divers and salvage personnel are working. The weather is worse and the sea rougher than that which compelled a halt two years ago when the S-51 sank off Block Island, the reports said.

PREPAREDNESS IS URGED BY SPEAKER BEFORE CLUB HERE

Adequate preparedness to safeguard against foreign invasion and

to insure domestic peace by protecting against communism was advocated for the United States by Mrs. A. C. Messenger, chairman of the foreign relations committee of the D. A. R. In an address before the weekly meeting of the Xenia Sunday Evening Club at Christ Episcopal Church Parish House Sunday night.

The speaker described the secret growth of communism in this country since the late war, having as its aim the overthrow of the present form of government, and warned against propaganda. Club members discussed the subject following the talk. The speech was in direct contrast to a talk on "Peace," heard last Sunday. Light refreshments, prepared by the committee in charge of arrangements, were served preceding the address.

Henry Eavey, chairman of the club, presided at the meeting and appointed a committee on arrangements for succeeding weeks. The club decided not to hold its weekly sessions during the next two weeks because of the Christmas holidays.

SUNDAY SERVICE AT

TRINITY OUTSTANDING

Before an audience that filled the church, the choir of Trinity M. E. Church presented one of the most impressive and beautiful programs given for several years, under the capable leadership of Mrs. William H. McGervey.

Three tableaux were highlights of the program, dramatizing the part played by the Shepherds, the manger and the Wise Men in the Story of the birth of The King. The part of The Madonna was taken by Miss Alicia Monroe and the other characters were taken by young people of the church.

The program opened with an organ prelude by Miss Juanita Rankin who furnished splendid accompaniment for the entire program. The candlelight procession, a feature of the Trinity song service, followed and the choir members took their places on the altar. The church was darkened during the procession and during the tableaux.

RICH or POOR?

Young or old, all suffer from intestinal stasis (constipation). The cause can be told with one word—That word is "Civilization"! It means "over-eating," "over-work," "worry" and "nervous exhaustion," wrong foods, wrong drinks! Not enough animal exercise, such as running, jumping, walking, climbing, etc.

The nervous force that should go to the bowels is taken by the brain or other parts of the body, to perform "civilized duties—or excesses."

Avoid all the causes you can! You can't avoid all of them, therefore you may need the aid of Black-burn's Casa-Royal Pills, to nourish and tone-up the bowels; to stimulate the liver; to cleanse and purify the system against grip, where delayed activity has made poisons which cause biliousness, sick headache, irritable, nervous, and impaired efficiency in work or play.

Blackburn's Casa-Royal Pills are non-secret, prompt, and pleasant. Sold by druggists for 25 years and 40 cts. Than Castor Oil! 45 pills—40 cts.

iron crowbars on a metal tank set off a small amount of gasoline in the tank. The explosion ripped the container from beneath the seat and hurled it some distance. The flare of the explosion caught the clothing of the two mechanics and they were soon enveloped in flames.

Fellow workmen smothered them with blankets, sacks and auto robes to extinguish the blaze. Police rushed them to the hospital where attaches said it would take forty-eight hours to determine the extent and seriousness of their burns. Two trucks were damaged in the fire that followed the explosion.

Cochran and Milburn were standing on the running boards on either side of the truck, working with iron bars in an effort to remove the tank from beneath the driver's seat. They thought the tank was empty they told hospital attaches, and intended to take it out of the truck and clean it. The tank was built to hold thirty gallons of gasoline.

Milburn's mother and his wife from this city are at his bedside.

VOLUNTEERS AIDED BY HEART TAG SALE

Xenia folk opened their hearts and purses Saturday to help destitute women with children and other unfortunates in care of the Volunteers of America by contributing the sum of $161.75 to that cause.

A statement issued by the organization's representative says: "To the city officials, the newspapers, the merchants who furnished the incentives for the children's efforts as well as to Mrs. L. S. Hyman's capable leadership full credit should be given; neither must the public's generosity in patronizing the youthful workers be omitted. From early in the morning until late in the afternoon each of the girls and boys played the merry game of 'competition' for the prizes and movie tickets and at the close of the 'contest' it was found that Etta Teach was entitled to the prize, having collected $14.28. The second was won by Naomi Henkel who had $11.65. Thelma Anderson had $9.37 and received the third. The fourth, fifth and sixth prizes were won by Donna De Voe, Levona Middleton and Mildred Horner. The other children were made happy with movie passes."

A PRACTICAL ANSWER

Now come Secretary of Agriculture Jardine, Senator Sackett and other Government authorities with a program for the settlement of the Muscle Shoals question.

In substance, their suggestion is for the Government to lease the power and, with the $2,500,000 or more annual rental derived therefrom, to construct modern nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals and other suitable locations for experimental production of high-grade fertilizers on a commercial scale, and to conduct practical experiments in its use for different crops on different soils.

No one can deny that the public and Congress desire to utilize Muscle Shoals to benefit agriculture without tying the properties up for a long period of years to a doubtful program of fertilizer manufacture.

During the period of ten years since the Muscle Shoals plants were built scientific progress in nitrogen fixation has developed processes which require but small amounts of power. They have rendered the present Muscle Shoals nitrate plants obsolete, and now dominate the world nitrogen situation. These changed conditions would seem to point the way to legislation that will secure cheaper fertilizer ingredients at Muscle Shoals and at the same time permit public use of surplus power for the domestic and industrial needs of a large and growing section of the South.

INSTALLMENT PLAN ENCOURAGES THRIFT

Installment plan buying, attacked by some business leaders as the prime factor in encouraging American families to extravagance, is really proving that the reverse of that charge is true, according to Prof. E. R. A. Seligman, Columbia university economist and noted finance expert, who has just completed a year's survey of installment plan practices.

"Installment credit tends on the whole to strengthen the motives which induce an individual to save, and also tends to increase his capacity to do so," says a summary of Prof. Seligman's conclusions presented in the Review of Reviews.

The economist's survey shows installment plan merchandising, a trivial factor in commerce 20 years ago, to have grown to such proportions that at present there is more than $2,000,000,000 worth of installment credit paper—approximately one-tenth of the national debt—outstanding.

More than half of these promissory notes represent credit of automobile purchasers, Prof. Seligman reports. He finds the installment plan a major factor in the motor industry's growth, since six out of every ten automobiles sold today are bought on a standard plan of one-third of the total price down with the remainder in 12 monthly payments. The resulting high production and employment figures of the industry have their parallels in other fields similarly affected by the installment plan, he says.

Installment selling, instead of simply advancing the time when demands become effective, really leads to an increase of purchasing power. The device of fractional payments results in an actual increase of production."

FORD, WORK AND WAR

Henry Ford makes a wise observation when he says that work is a cure for war. Any nation which is as busy as America, is not likely to get into war. Unemployment and idleness breed revolution and war. Work is the best tonic for nations, as it is for individuals. The brain and the body were meant for activity. Idleness is an unnatural state.

PLAY

Play may not be doing you any good. It depends on how you do it. If you play bridge for high stakes and take the game very seriously you are using up as much nervous energy as in hard work. Golf, tennis, and all other games can be played so long and hard and taken so seriously that they do not furnish recreation. Play has to do with the mind as well as the body. If we can not relax in play we might as well stay at work.

THEY'RE DOING WELL

A rich man, leaving a large sum of money, says in his will that the class most worthy of help is that composed of girls who are earning their own living.

He reasons strangely. Girls who are not earning their own living are getting less out of life and need help more. Girls who earn their own living are independent. Too bad that great bequests can not be made in the form of ambition and opportunity. With plenty of ambition and opportunity money becomes an incidental.

NO FACTS

Glib talkers may have doorknob heads. Somebody is always ready to run down churches—to say the church has filed. Last year the wood-lum industries of one church—the Methodist—sold more than a million seven hundred thousand dollars worth of mended furniture and said the bulk of the money to the deaf and dumb, the blind and crippled, and the industrial misfits who worked in its shops.

We seem doomed to hear the most criticism from those who know least what they are talking about.

NEW WORLDS

The accidental starting and stopping of a toy train by radio has given scientists something new to think about. The radiation of power over long distances will some day be a reality. There is something thrilling in the knowledge that we live on the edge of an undiscovered world—a new world of applied science.

The Daybook

OF A

New Yorker

—By—
BURTON RASCOE

NEW YORK, Dec. 19.—This Christmas spirit is a strange spirit and wondrous affair. Tens of thousands elbow their brothers in the market place, buying everything from tricot to tiaras. . . . Clerks stand on swollen, weary feet from one hurried day's end to the other. . . . Little children are dragged, flustered and excited, to see the four-hundredth, eleventh edition of Kris Kingle. . . . The little woman buys friend husband a velvet house coat he'll never wear, and charges it on the dread January account. . . . The blue fir trees thoughtfully placed by landscape gardeners all over Westchester county front lawns bloom out startling with red and gold electric bulbs, "living Christmas trees" to gladden the heart of the save-a-tree guild. . . . The ten-cent store clerks snarl over the tissue paper counter, and pray for a better job before another year rolls around again.

They tell a wry one about John D. Rockefeller and a check he wrote in payment for dinner at a New York hotel. The waiter, following routine orders, took John D.'s check to the cashier for a. o. k., seeing that his multi-millionaire customer wasn't a guest of the hotel. The cashier had been bawled out before for cashing checks for transients, and he hemmed and hawed about it. Then he said that if George, the dining room captain, would write his a. o. k. on the back of the check, he'd let it go through. George did. And he is still proud of the fact that his signature saved the famous dime dispenser from embarrassment. It is a well-known trick of the fabulously rich, not to carry any cash on the person. I know several millionaires who seldom have taxi fare. Maybe that's how they got where they are today.

I'm glad to see the girls are wearing snapper gossamer this year. The collegiate femmes in raccoon coats managed to ride about the handicaps of the old-fashioned, byack buckled variety of overshoes, but when such a foot-covering was worn along with a good-looking outfit on Fifth avenue, it certainly struck a paring note. Now the close-fitting beige or gray overshoes catch the eye pleasantly, and the lady commuters, I fancy, are happier.

They have small boys in the most dapper uniforms to take charge of the lesser luggage at the Mayfair, in Park avenue. These diminutive "button" look not a day over 12 years old, and their presence there seems to me to be more in the nature of atmosphere than anything else, since other attendants, full grown, carry up the big bags.

IRISH PREACHERS AND POVERTY

Even if I'm hung for saying so, I'm coming to feel considerable distrust for Irish churches. Poverty in an Irish village often appears to be somewhat in proportion to the number of churches it supports. At any rate, there is evidence that the churches and preachers are getting more from the masses of the people than the people are getting from the churches and preachers.

In one village of some 1,500 inhabitants, I discovered that there were exactly four fine big homes in the whole town—four comfortable big houses with a few acres of landscaped vronds, servants and other evidences of comparative luxury. Just four such good places, mind you, and every one occupied by a preacher!

By way of contrast, I paused at the doorway of a three-room cottage within walking distance of these finer homes, to ask road directions of a comely, flaxen-haired maiden who sat on the step making lace. Her name, I recall, was Minnie.

She seemed to be expert at making Irish point lace, but because of modern styles in women's underwear, such work is no longer very profitable. Most of the time she works in the spinning mills—the same mills my dad used to work in—and being capable of operating a machine, she receives a little more than many other girls employed there—about $5 a week. I asked her if she went to church and dropped part of her wages in the contribution box.

"Oh, yes," she replied, "I always give what I can."

Since whatever she gives, no matter how little, must mean a real sacrifice, I thought of the pretty homes at the edge of the village where the preachers live in style and comfort. And I kept wondering if the goods these men or the churches deliver is worth to Minnie what she pays for it. Just what are they doing to justify their upkeep?

I wondered, too, if any of these ministers of the gospel chances to have a sense of humor. If so, what does he think, and how vigorously does he gauge his tongue into his cheek, when he prepares a sermon, say, about camels and the eyes of needles?

What a comfort it must be to his flock, nearly all under-fed, to learn direct from one who is enjoying the luxuries they themselves are better off, with far better chance for entering the kingdom of heaven, because of their poverty!

WHEN GOOD FELLOWS GET TOGETHER

Living and Loving

By MRS. VIRGINIA LEE

TAKES TWO TO MAKE FRIENDSHIP

One person cannot create a friendship any more than one can make a quarrel. Both sides must be at least "willing." So don't set your heart on a friendship with a member of the opposite sex unless you know the other party also is anxious for it.

"Dear Mrs. Lee: I have read your advice in the paper right along, and I would like to get a little advice from you about some boys and a girl friend. My girl friend and I have met two boys that we love dearly. We had been with them about a month and the boys told us to take them to the movies. We wrote and they never answered our letters. Please advise us what to do. How can we keep their friendship?"

Lonesome Sweethearts.

Wait, while, girls, and maybe when the boys get a bit settled they will write. But if you don't hear, the best thing is to forget them. You'll be surprised how well you can get along without them after a short time.

Two letters, both too long to print, have been received from "Od Fashioned." I'll give part of one and the answers, and hope she won't mind.

"Dear Mrs. Lee: I'm 22 years old and go everywhere with two girl friends. We're inseparable. One of the girls likes to flirt, and I detest it. Do you think it rude of me to keep telling this girl about it? I'm afraid men will think we're 'street walkers.' She tells me I'm too old-fashioned."

As long as your girl friend understands thoroughly that you disapprove of her conduct I would not nag at her. You needn't be seen with her if she persists, and you might mention that to her. As to the young men you speak of in your second letter, I suppose they are not deserting him.

One of our readers writes this information, thinking it may help some of our lonely readers who are in Brooklyn, N. Y., now or are likely to be.

"Dear Mrs. Lee: I would like to say that a Brooklyn branch of the Slow Club has been organized under the supervision of Susan Chester, of a Brooklyn paper. Membership may be had by applying to Mrs. S. H. Chester, 591 Williams avenue, Brooklyn. All those from 18 years old up may join, and those between 16 and 18 may join with permission of their parents. Hoping this information will help, I remain, B. N."

Thank you very much, B. N., this may encourage others to form clubs in which to draw lonely folks.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS

Letters from Readers to Readers

In today's mail I have a letter from Mrs. D. who used to have Psoriasis and was cured by advice similar to that I give—ultraviolet, 5 per cent salicylic ointment for the scales, etc. She enclosed a very encouraging letter from Miss W., whose sister was terribly discouraged by her Psoriasis.

Not infrequently when I publish excerpts from the correspondence letters telling of certain troubles, those who have been similarly afflicted send me letters telling of their help, either by following my advice or that of some other source, to send to the writers.

I certainly appreciate the kindly spirit of helpfulness that prompts these letters, and so would the patient. However, dear followers, the letters with their addresses are destroyed after we have gone through them, so I regret it is impossible for me to forward your communications.

Thank you, Mrs. D., for writing and letting us know your good results. And thank you for your interest in Miss W.'s sister.

Citrus Fruits and Milk or Cereals?

G.—Yes, citrus fruits may be used with milk, and they may be used with cereals. In fact, the cereals having an acid-ash are bettered by having the alkali-ash citrus fruits with them. Do you ever try sliced peaches on oatmeal, with cream or half cream and milk? Nothing so delicious. However, there are some who undoubtedly seem to digest fruits better when they are taken apart from the meals. Naturally these would follow this procedure.

An Easy Way to Have a Non-Acid Diet

W.—We sent you the leaflet on Balaam's Diet for which you enclosed a self-addressed, stamped envelope.

Yes, indeed, it is very important to have a non-acid diet, W., to avoid the acidosis which seems to furnish a foundation for so many disorders. That is very easily done by having at least two pounds of fruits and vegetables daily in the diet and at least two glasses of some type of milk. (These are all alkali-ash foods). And by not overeating of the grain foods nor flesh foods for eggs—all acid-ash foods.

Many who cannot use straight milk can use the buttermilk, or can use the milk when it is made up into soups or egg-nogs or even acidulated with lemon juice.

Scalloped oysters make a splendid "main dish" for Sunday supper—or for any other supper, for that matter. It is a dish that always calls for a sharp tasting salad, pickles or jelly. It is also well to have cutsup or horsed'ish on the table when it is served. Weak vinegar might be used in place of the lemon juice in the cabbage salad if better liked or more convenient.

Scalloped Oysters—Butter the baking dish, put in it a layer of cracker crumbs, wet with oyster liquid and slightly warmed milk. Let the top layer be of crumbs, dotted with butter. Bake, covered, one-half hour, uncover and brown quickly.

DOUBLE TIES FOR THIS COUPLE

DETROIT, Mich., Dec. 17.—A young couple appeared before Phil Birkenhauer, marriage license clerk. "We want this knot tied doubly tight," said the man. Birkenhauer thought for a while. With companionate marriage and such being in vogue now he couldn't just make out what the man wanted. He consulted Judges Nomer Ramey and William A. Cuff of municipal court. After some deliberation both judges agreed to speak in unison while reading the marriage ceremony, thus tying the knot doubly tight. That's what the couple wanted.

Such things as mineral oil and agar are good to tide you over until your intestinal tract is regulated to empty itself regularly, and it will not be so regulated until you sufficient bulk in your diet. Sufficient bulk for most people is not secured unless the rougher whole grain products are used and one and one-half to two pounds of fruits and vegetables are taken daily. Behind the Scenes in Washington

WASHINGTON, Dec. 17.—The row between President Coolidge and Secretary of the Treasury Mellon, on one side, and "big business," as spoken for by the Chamber of Commerce of the U. S. A. on the other hand, over the question of tax reduction, really is this season's prime sensation in Washington.

President Coolidge, "big business" and Secretary Mellon always have been regarded here as practically synonymous terms. To have them start another is enough to give anybody a shock.

Swearing is about what it amounts to—not literal cuss words, but as close to 'em as technically parliamentary language permits.

The report keeps floating around that Secretary of Commerce Hoover furnished the inspiration for the Commerce Chamber's demand of a $400,000,000 tax cut.

There's no way of testing this yarn, for if Hoover did give the chamber its hunch, he certainly did it exceedingly on the q. t. Nevertheless, it's one of those stories which would be mighty interesting if true, because it would imply the equivalent of the sticking of a pin into Secretary Mellon, by Secretary Hoover—about an inch.

As between cabinet members, all must agree that this would be a noteworthy event.

It was President Coolidge who originally mentioned $225,000,000 as the maximum tax cut it would be safe to make this winter, but of course he got his figures from Secretary Mellon, which was right and proper—his recognized financial expert.

Thus we commit Secretary Mellon to a $225,000,000 estimate.

Now, if we thought Hoover, thought the Chamber of Commerce of the U. S. A., to allege a $175,000,000 error in Mellon's reckoning, we place Hoover in the position of imputing to Mellon no merely trifling inaccuracy.

It's to be borne in mind that American "big business" and American "high finance" are no longer, to all intents and purposes, the same thing that once they were.

That accounts for some of these disagreements that seem rather queer at first glance.

Time was when American bankers put their money into American business, and nothing else. Time was when American business depended on American bankers, or went broke.

Today plenty of American bankers have bigger interests abroad than they have here at home. Today lots of American business have all the money they want, to look after their own requirements, and bankers can go hang, for all they care.

Look at our tariff sentiment! American banking and American industries were a unit, on protection—once.

The industries—except a few, which have developed exports—are as protectionistic as ever. Our international bankers are beginning to discover that protection's "economically unsound."

"Does the idea mix with tax reduction?"

"Hoover's pre-eminently representative of American industries, Mellon of American banking, on an international scale."

Taxes, tariff protection, and war debts are it, just you, Mellon or Hoover or anybody see his way through it—even as 'though a glass, darkly'—yet?

The thought's in its formative stage. Maybe this session of congress will give it some shape.

How to Achieve Beauty

By MME. HELENA RUBINSTEIN

MASSAGE FOR BEAUTIFUL HANDS

Hands respond so quickly to intelligent care, that I feel there is no excuse for any woman to have hands that are not a direct compliment to her face as well as to those of beauty in themselves.

Much can be done with massage to improve the shape and elasticity of your hands. That they can be made white and attractive in texture goes without saying. Today I am going to concentrate on their line, form and gracefulness.

Fill your hands with a good cream. One made by a pasteurized process is especially good for relieving the tension of tired, nervous hands and for increasing the effectiveness of massage. Wring your hands for a minute or two to get the cream well worked in. Then pretend that you are putting on imaginary gloves, massaging down each finger separately and then up the arm and wrist toward the arm. To taper your fingers and stretch them to their greatest length, to make them slim and graceful—pull out along each one separately with a considerable pressure and pinch at the sides of each nail.

Rub a liberal supply of cream into your knuckles, and massage around them with a rotary movement. Knuckles, like the elbows, are only too likely to be dark spots on the landscape if you do not give them proper care.

Stretch between the fingers of each hand with the other hand. Then relax your arms and shake your hands from the wrists, just as if you were trying to shake them off. I am getting a little away from the subject of massage, but exercise can aid massage as much in achieving beauty of hands, that I feel I must say a word about them here. A good exercise for suppleness is to do-leave your fingers, then push the palms outward and down as far as you can stretch. Or clench your fists as tight as you can, then stretch your fingers apart until they become white with the strain, and clench again.

A particularly good time to work on your hands is when you first wake up in the morning. Put on the cream and spend a few minutes, that you would ordinarily take in dozing, massaging your hands. You will find that it not only beautifies your hands but makes you feel biter all over.

Peter's Adventure

By MRS. FLORENCE SMITH VINCENT

The four little Brown Bees unfurled their wings and made ready to depart. Cotton-Tail raised a trembling paw to stop them.

"Wait a minute, oh, just one minute, please!" squeaked the frightened fellow. "I have lifted my ears in vain. Not a whisper do I hear. Remember I am 'way down here in the matted grasses' where I can neither see nor scent—that I have only heels to depend upon, not wings to carry me from danger, as have you. Where, oh, where is Growly? Tell me so that I may hurry off in the other direction."

Buzz-Fuzz dropped upon a downy thistle-blow, close to the Rabbit's side.

"Stand on your hind legs, Cotton-Tail!" commanded she. "The young Rabbit did as he was told."

"Now, point your pink nose toward the white birch that grows by the pasture brook—see, like a

Cotton-Tail leaped into the air as though he had been shot.

"Follow my nose I shall have to, but not the way you told me to point it, if you please. It's right about face for me! Oh, dear, oh, dear me! I must hurry. Growly might not eat me, but he would scare me to death, and one fate would be quite as bad as the other."

"Hop! Skip! Jump! Wings could have taken Cotton-Tail to safety now more swiftly than had his fleet feet. Across the clover patch, a spot of fluff bobbing up and down in the far-off pasture, did Cotton-Tail was lost to sight among the tall grasses."

"What in the world makes Cotton-Tail so afraid of Growly? The big Brown Bear would rather dine on berries than Bunnies, wouldn't he?" Peter turned and asked the question of the Bees, but the four brown flyers were winging their way through the sunlight; without a word of farewell Cotton-Tail had scurried to safety, and the four loyal work bees had set off to find their queen. Peter was alone. And it didn't take him long to make up his mind that if he didn't want to meet Growly the Bear it was high time that he, too, made his way home from the meadow!

PULLET SHOWS SPEED

VANCOUVER, B. C., Dec. 17.—The modern tendency of speed is becoming apparent also among hens according to a pullet in Northern British Columbia. Hatched during below-zero weather, in February she laid her first egg in July and became brooder during September. When her owner, W. L. Padden, attempted to break her from broodiness the bird displayed will of her own and disappeared. She returned to the flock recently, leading six husky chicks she had hatched in a nest she built in nearby brush.

streak of silver 'tis shining through the grass stalks. Only a short fly from the silver birch and one comes to the Woods where is the tree in which hung our nest. Follow your nose, Cotton-Tail, and you will bound straight into the paws of the great Brown Bear."

FRIENDLY ENEMIES

LONDON, England—A dog's remarkable friendship for a kitten was recently told by the owner of a terrier and a kitten. The kitten became ill and was taken to a clinic for treatment. The dog was inconsolable. Then two weeks later the dog disappeared. Early next morning, however, an imperious scratching at the front door awakened the owner, who, on opening it, found his dog vigorously wagging his tail and carrying the kitten in his mouth. How the dog found his missing playmate could not be learned.

submarine S-8, her sister ship, zigzagged that oscillating signals sent to the sunken craft had been returned.

"S-4 answers oscillating tell nothing but we are now attempting to talk with them," the S-8 reported. Admiral Frank Brumby sent a radio to Washington that six of the entombed were alive, following Kadie's report.

Captain E. J. King, in charge of rescue operations said: "Certain men are alive in the S-4. Everybody in the battery compartment is certainly dead. Just how many died altogether is a matter of speculation.

"There may have been three or four men on duty in the battery chamber. But the crew in quarters are there and perhaps there were more.

"The S-4 is now lying on a muddy bottom, 101 feet long. We have attached a line to it and will now concentrate on pouring air into her.

They are using an innovation in diving operations in this last naval tragedy. It is a "bird cage" to hold the divers, a square platform with an iron post at each corner.

Eadie, on his historic trip below which established communication with those alive, was dropped by stages to the water bottom.

A telephone line with a microphone attachment parallels the divers' cable. A youthful sailor with an ear-piece and a mouth phone, sat athwart the poop deck of the falcon. He must listen, listen, listen without fail, on pain of court martial.

Eadie had been down about fifteen minutes when the youth stiffened. Officers, alertly watching his face, hurried over to him. They heard him shout excitedly down the tube to Eadie.

"They're answering," His superiors heard him repeat his findings and then tuned in themselves. Tap tap, tap came from the microphone glued to the sunken submarine's side.

Eadie on his return to the surface an hour later also reported that the battery compartment on the starboard side of the S-4 was in a bad way and that the coming tower had been torn off.

E. J. Carr, another diver, was then sent below to prod into the conning tower and attach an air hose to displace the water.

"The Paulding was patrolling in the vicinity of Cape Cod on the afternoon of December 17," said Captain W. Malloy, of the coast guard cutter Tampa, in describing the collision between the destroyer and the submarine.

"There was good visibility and a good wind. The first intimation of the presence of a submarine, was when her conning tower and periscope emerged from the water directly in front of the Paulding. It was too close for the Paulding to avoid, though the helm was shifted and full speed given."

"The Paulding struck the submarine at the conning tower which tipped a long hole in the under water body of the Paulding. Then the submarine, rolling over, showed her stern and sank. The Paulding immediately lowered a life boat for use in case any survivors emerged from the sunken boat and dropped a buoy to mark the spot. The Paulding was still with water but managed to get into Provincetown Harbor."

Captain Malloy said that the Paulding was on patrol duty and going at the time about fifteen knots per hour. He said that the submarine's battery compartment probably was pierced.

Lieutenant Commander J. S. Bayless of the Paulding, said: "Ensign George Phannemiller was on watch and the Paulding was doing fifteen knots per hour and so far as is known was going at one third speed. Phannemiller sighted what he thought was a fish and stuck, used to mark nets. The helm was shifted to avoid the stick and it was then that Ensign Phannemiller sighted the conning tower of the submarine. The crash followed and the submarine turned over and sank bow first at an angle of forty-five degrees."

EXPECT NEW RECORD

Co-operative livestock agencies are expected to make an all-time record during December for a month's volume of business, according to reports received here from the livestock marketing department of the Ohio Farm Bureau Federation. The increase in volume is credited to a special campaign of education on co-operative livestock marketing put on by the state and county farm bureau field service and the Ohio Livestock Co-operative Association.

For the week ending December 10, a total of 644 decks of livestock were handled by co-operative agencies supported by Ohio farmers. These agencies include co-operative commission associations at Buffalo, Cleveland, Pittsburgh and Cincinnati, and a direct selling and purchasing unit operating at these points and at Columbus.

Of the terminal agencies, the co-operative at Buffalo handled the largest volume, while the farmers' agency at Cleveland sold more than a third of the consignments to that market. Agencies at Pittsburgh and at Cincinnati far exceeded their volume of the same week a year ago.

Sixty-six decks of livestock were sold during the week directly from country points to packers, a method of co-operative marketing in which Ohio livestock interests are pioneering.

Not only have shipments to market increased, but the total co-operative purchases of feeder livestock through co-operative channels for this season is 208 decks, much more than double the amount last year.

In the course of the campaign more than a hundred meetings of livestock producers have been held over the state at which information was distributed on market grades, relation of production to marketing, and other topics.

Money Love

CHAPTER XL
There never yet was a woman in love who was not actually beside herself with jealousy at times.

And Lily France was exactly that as she stood facing Pat, her husband, in the doorway of the flat that Sunday night. She was jealous to the point of frenzy. Her face was white, and her eyes looked black as they blazed at him. Her breath came unevenly.

"Do you mean to say that you've just left that Eriz creature—and then dared to come home to me?" she asked him, putting her hands to her throat. It felt tight, and as if it were filled with fluff; her heart beat suffocatingly.

"Where else would I come but home to you?" Pat asked, reasonably enough. He wasn't very calm. "This is my home, isn't it? And you're my wife, after all."

Lily gave a laugh that sounded like a sob. "Yes," she said bitterly, "but I don't know how long this is going to be your home—or how much longer I'm going to be your wife."

She let that sink in, and then she rushed on: "Don't fool yourself into thinking that you're the only one of us who's sick and tired of this marriage. Pat, I don't think that I'm not just as attracted to other men as you are to that Eriz lemon! Don't think that I haven't plenty of chances to step out, myself, because I have!"

Pat frowned, not angrily, but in a thoughtful, puzzled way. He closed the hall door behind him and stood with his shoulders against it. He took her by both of her wrists and pulled her close to him, looking hard at her.

"Now, what do you mean by that?" he wanted to know. Lily smiled at him scornfully. "That, my darling husband," she said, "is some more of my own business!"

And, with a sudden twist of her shoulders, she wrenched herself away from him and flew into the bedroom, slamming and locking the door behind her.

She threw herself down across her bed, sobbing hysterically into the pillows. Above the sound of her own crying she heard Pat knocking on the door and begging her to let him come in.

Now and then she caught bits of what he was saying—"at least throw me my pajamas and a comforter"—"sleep on the couch, but I've got to sleep somewhere—"

And then more knocking. Lily paid not the slightest bit of attention to him. She went on sobbing quietly into the pillows, and presently she heard him go down the hall.

She sat up then in the shaft of moonlight that lay across the bed in a wide band of silver. Pat and that Eriz walking along in that silvery light, under the leafless trees, side by side! She thought of them that way and her sobs broke out again. Pat and that horrid little woman!

Then the whole flat seemed to shake with the sound of the front door being violently closed. Through the thin walls came the faint echo of footsteps on the stairs, the dull thud of the street door being slammed.

"Pat's gone!" Lily said to herself, hardly believing it. Like a shot she was off the bed and out in the tiny sitting room.

She flung up the window and leaned out into the night. Yes, there he was, going down the street, a gray shadow against the deeper gray shadows of the darkness.

But where was he going? "To his father's house, I suppose," Lily decided. "Or else back to the Jettersons!" She hated the Jettersons more at that moment than she ever had known she could hate anyone.

She loathed both of them—Sadie and Roy—simply because they were friends of the Eriz.

She closed the window and turned back into the silent room. All at once she was afraid to be there, alone in it.

The kind of wild, unreasoning terror that sometimes comes to women alone in houses at night, swept over her like an icy wave, leaving her cold and shivering.

It took every bit of her courage to walk back down the hall and into the dark bedroom. When she had turned on the light she felt better, but she knew she could not stay in the place all night.

"I'd die of fright—and they'd find me with pure white hair in the morning," she said to herself, and began to pack an overnight bag with panic-stricken haste. "I'll go to a hotel if it takes my last penny."

In five minutes she was dressed and out in the street. Then, just as she started for the corner, she discovered that she had forgotten her handbag with all her money in it. Pat had given her the night before.

For an instant she thought of running down to the janitor and asking him to go into the flat for the handbag. Then something else far simpler flashed into her mind. Why not go to the France family for the night? Their house was only a few blocks away, and it would do them all good to know what a rotten trick Pat had played upon her!

"They think he's so wonderful," she said to herself, scornfully, starting along the sidewalk under the October moon. "I'll just show him up."

The little house was wrapped in darkness when she reached it. But as she opened the front gate, with its rusty squeak, a light shone out from two of the upper windows. By the time Lily reached the porch, Mrs. France had the front door open and was standing just inside the hall.

She was wearing a faded Canton flannel kimono, and her gray hair was in two funny little braids upon her shoulders. "I saw you coming when you passed the lamp post," she whispered, drawing the girl into the house. "I was just kneeling down by the window to say my prayers."
